PITTSBURGH — A new arts and leisure magazine has arrived on the newsstands in the nation's steel capitol. In the planning stages for over a year, the magazine, City Gazette, has devoted its entire premiere issue to a review of the cultural and entertainment scene in the old and once "smokey city". City Gazette, an outgrowth of a committee for cultural awareness and discussion, received the majority of its financial backing from humanities' entrepreneur Robert M. Giannetti and his Public Committee for the Humanities in Pennsylvania. The editors said they chose Pittsburgh because the city has the potential for the greatest change.
